

The Cathedral of the Marsh (Theddlethorpe, Lincolnshire).

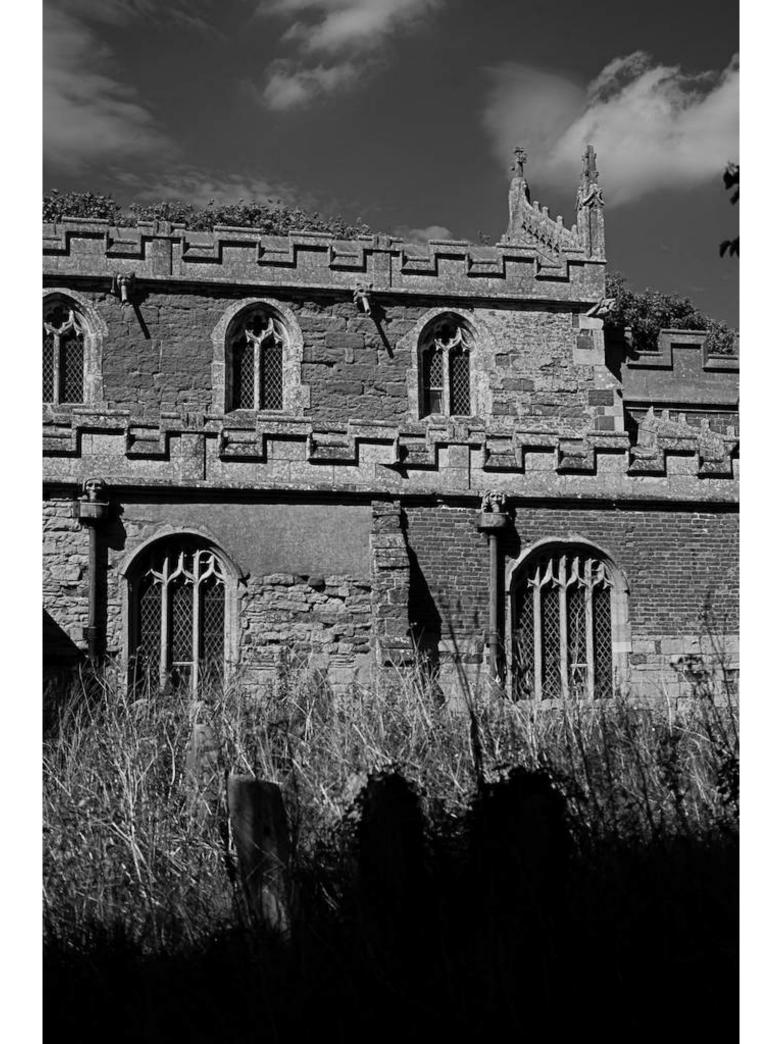

Redundant since 1971, All Saints' Church, known locally as 'The Cathedral of the Marsh' owing to its size and the detail of its ornate carvings, was originally built in the Twelfth Century and situated close to what is believed to have been the site of a Norman manor house. The majority of the church was rebuilt at some point in the late Fourteenth Century, with further repairs carried out in the 1860s.

The church is constructed of local greenstone with limestone and some portions patched with brick. The parapets are battlemented. The interior contains many historically significant delights, including a Fifteenth Century font, rood screen and tombstone. A memorial brass honouring Robert Hayton in the south chapel dates from 1424 and depicts a knight in armour of a style that, when the brass was created, was already obsolete.

I have a personal connection with the church, which is now a Grade I listed building, as several members of my family were christened there. It's a beautiful, peaceful place that is deeply photogenic.

Paul Andrew Julian Lewis, 2018

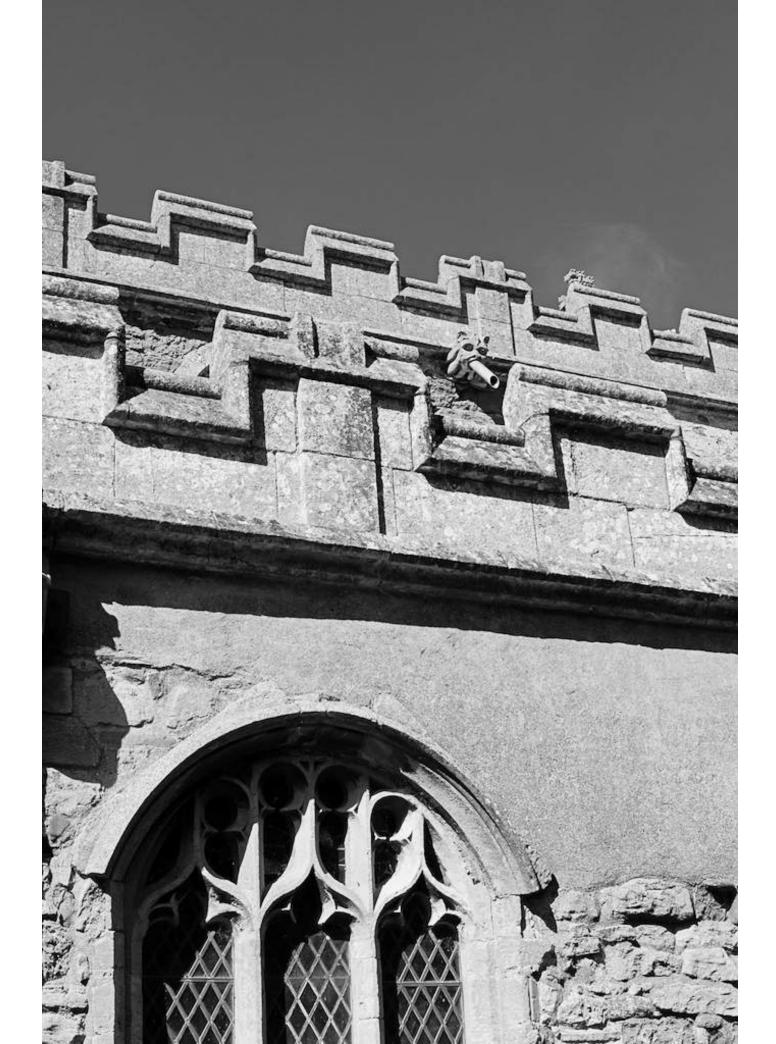

Please use 'two page view' to view this document

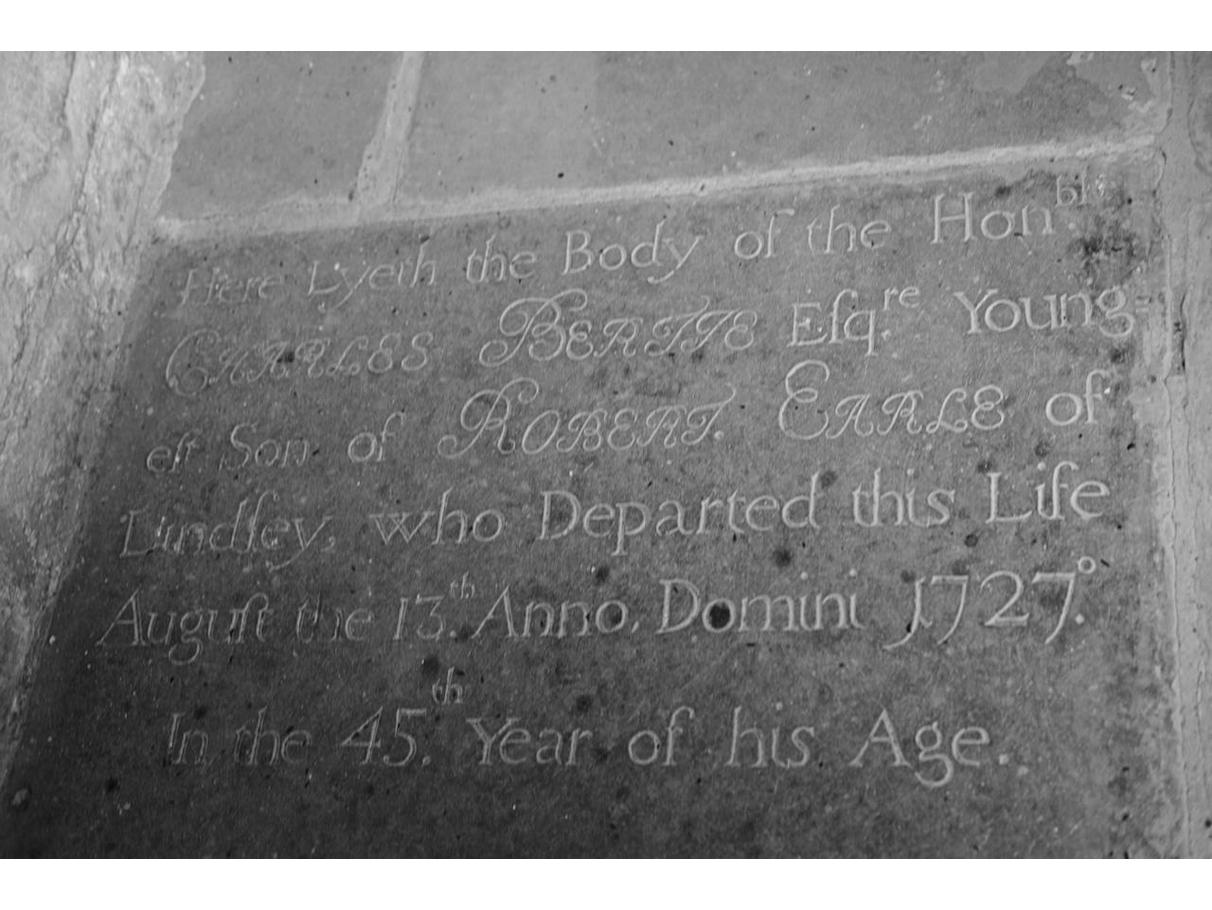

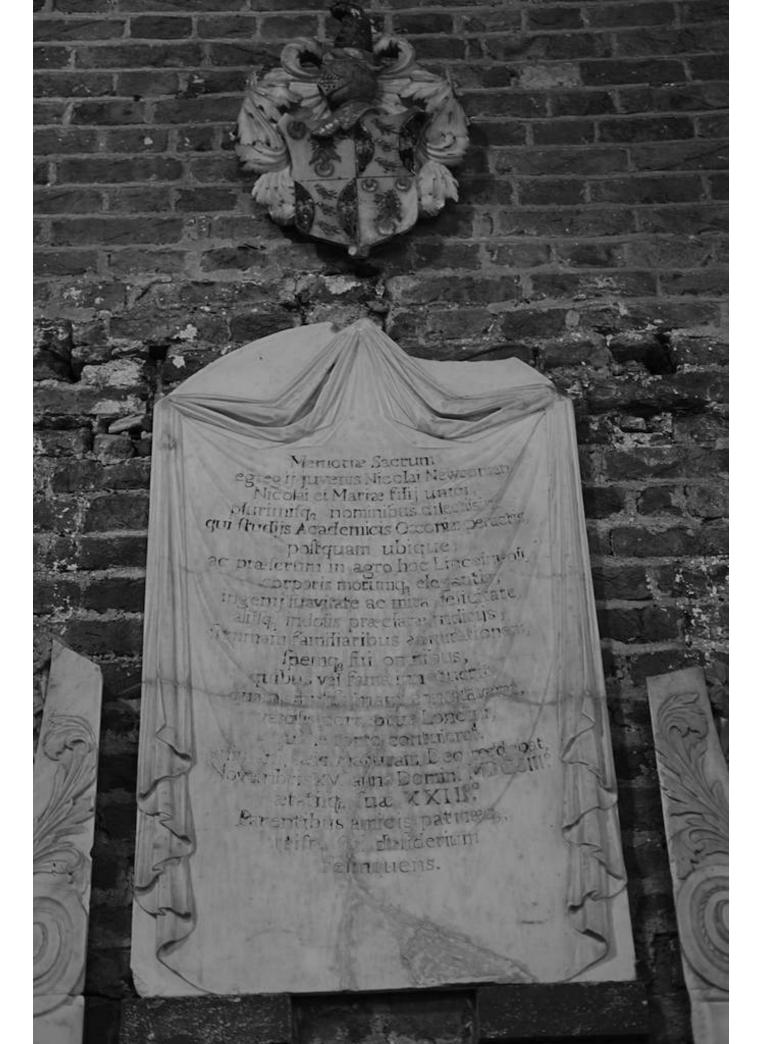

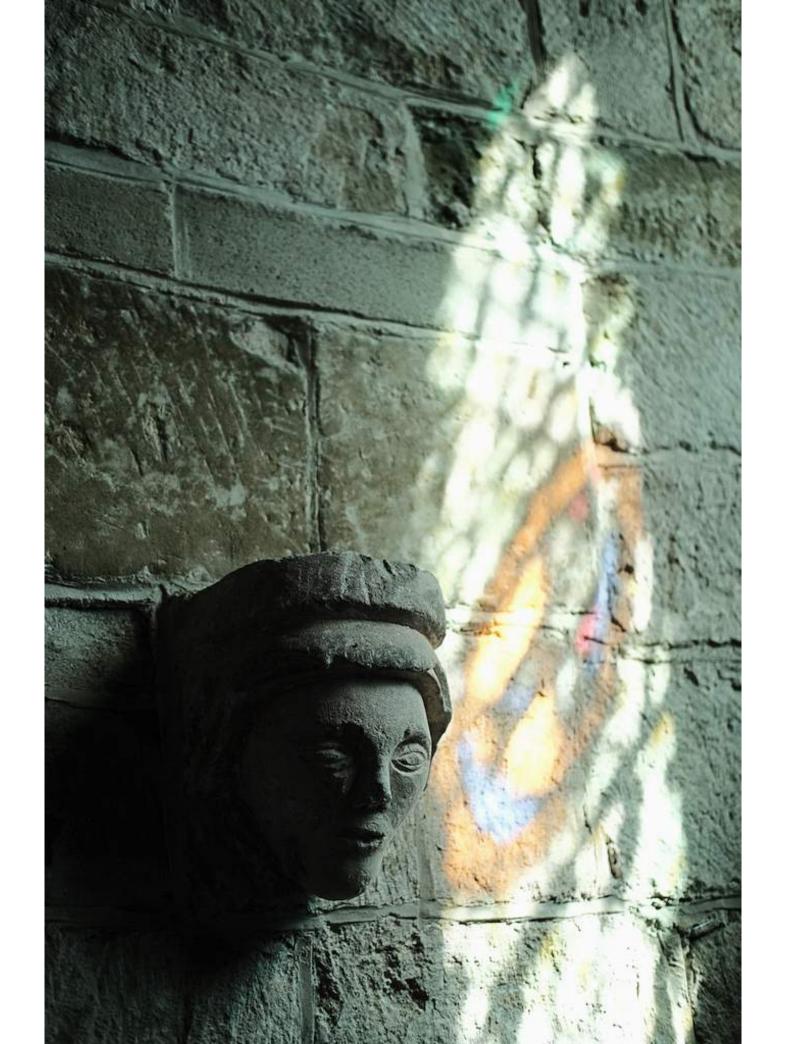

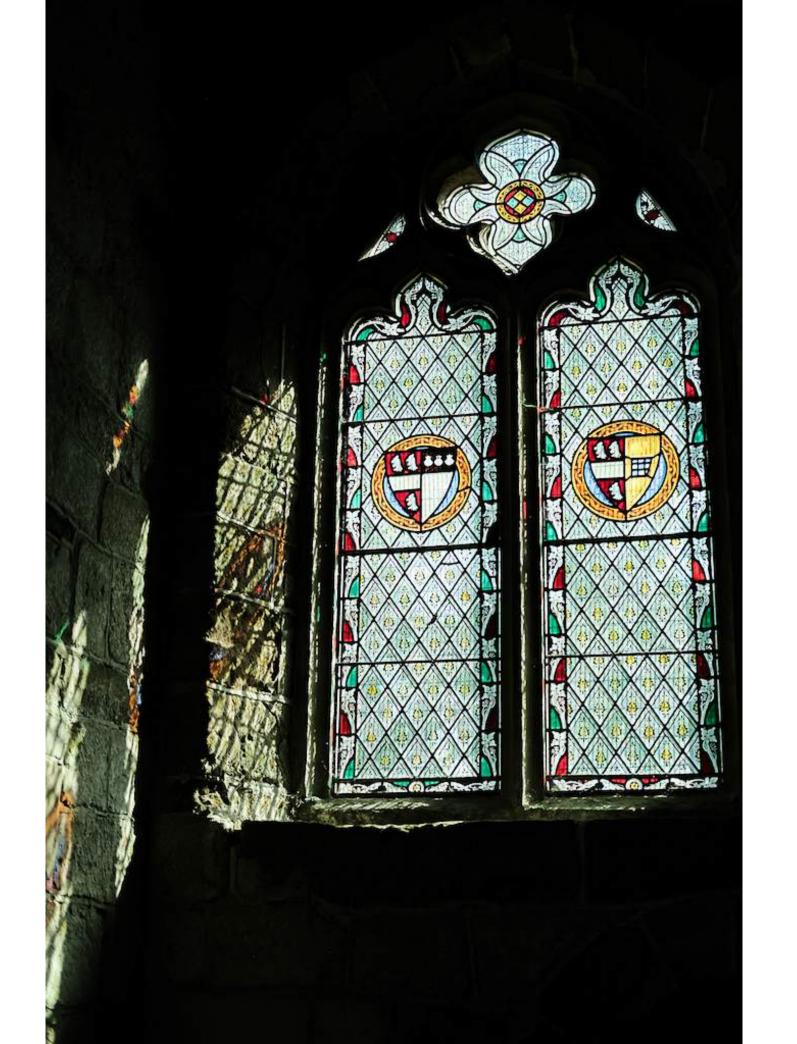

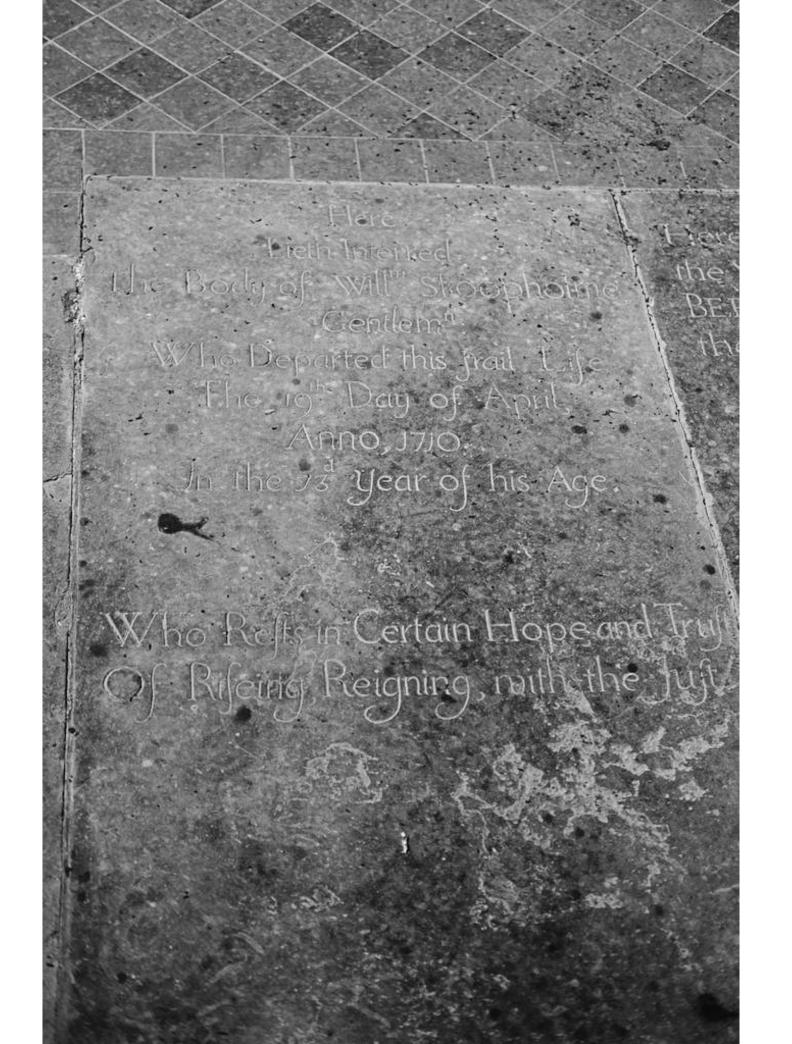

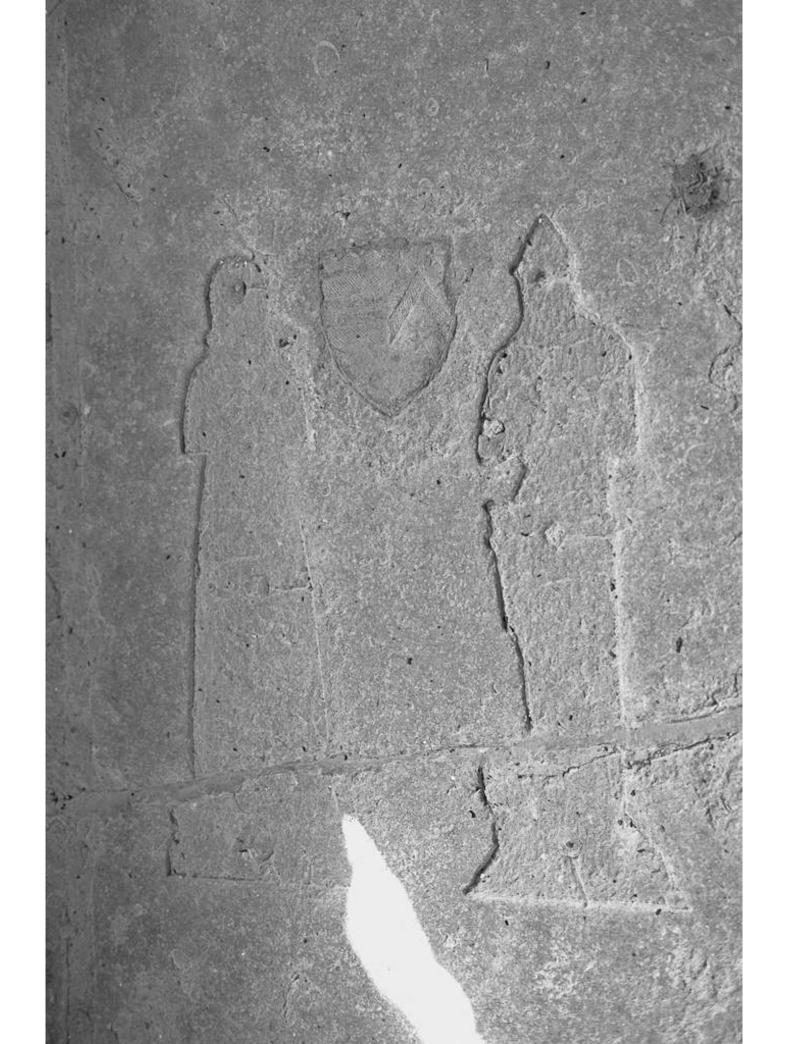

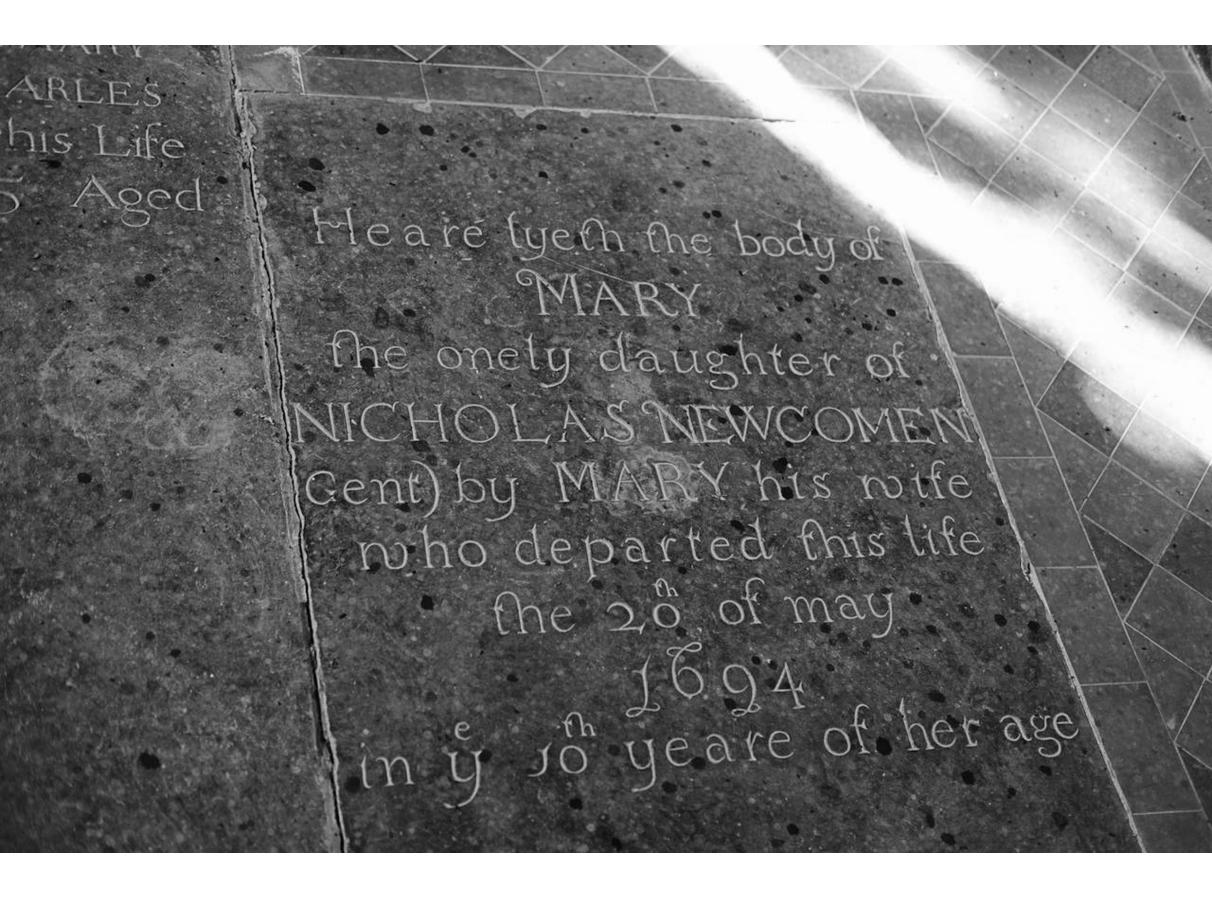

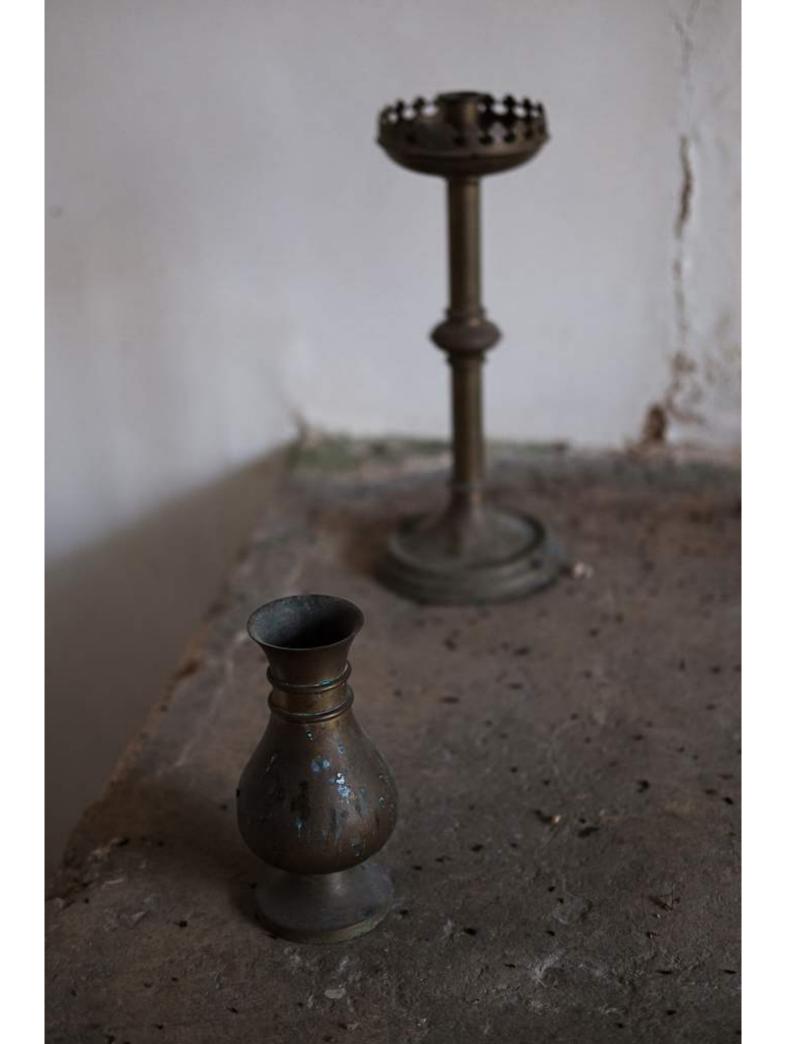

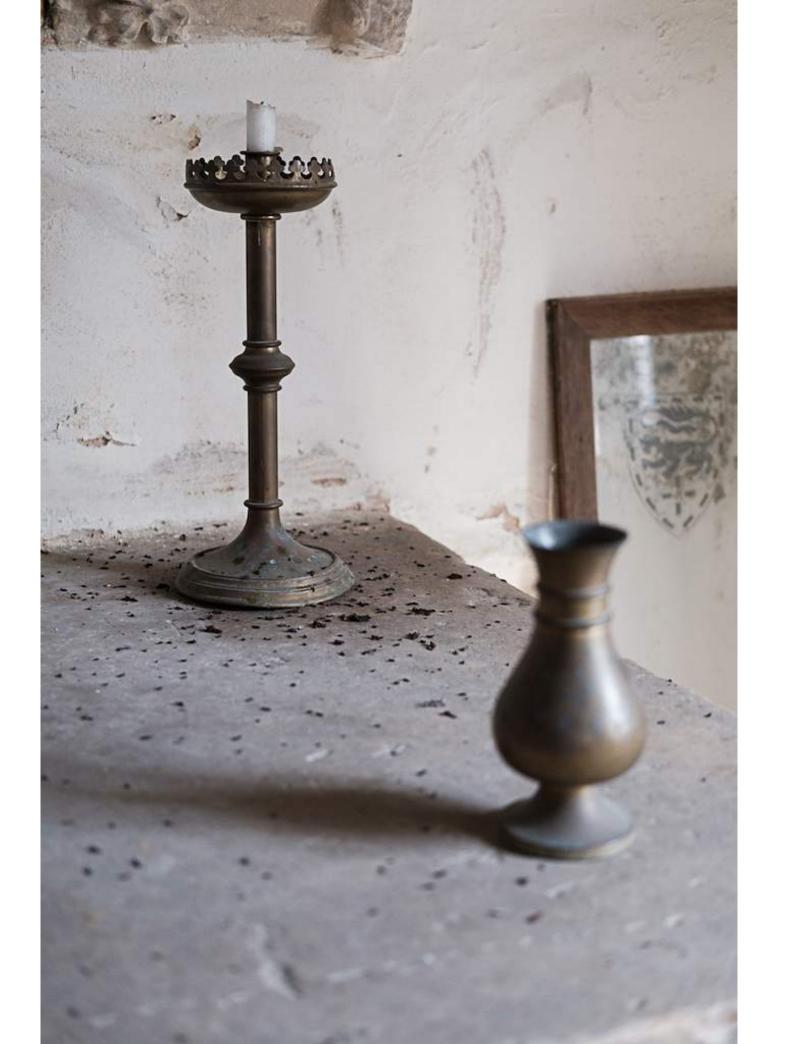

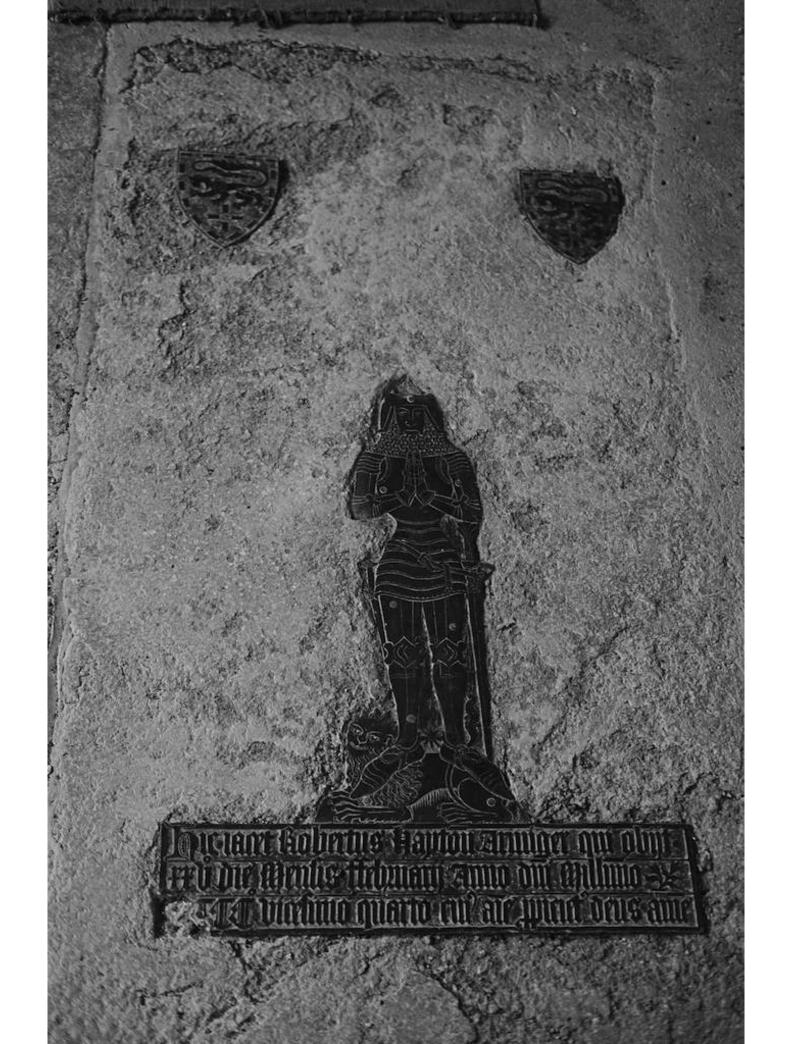

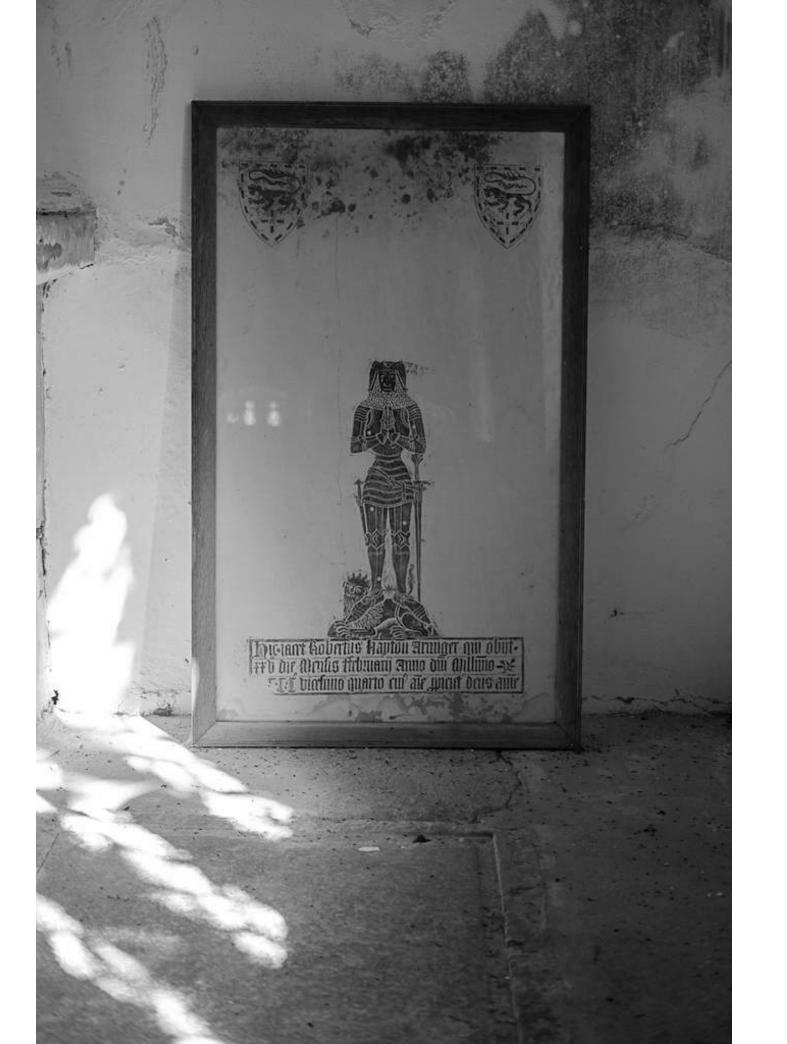

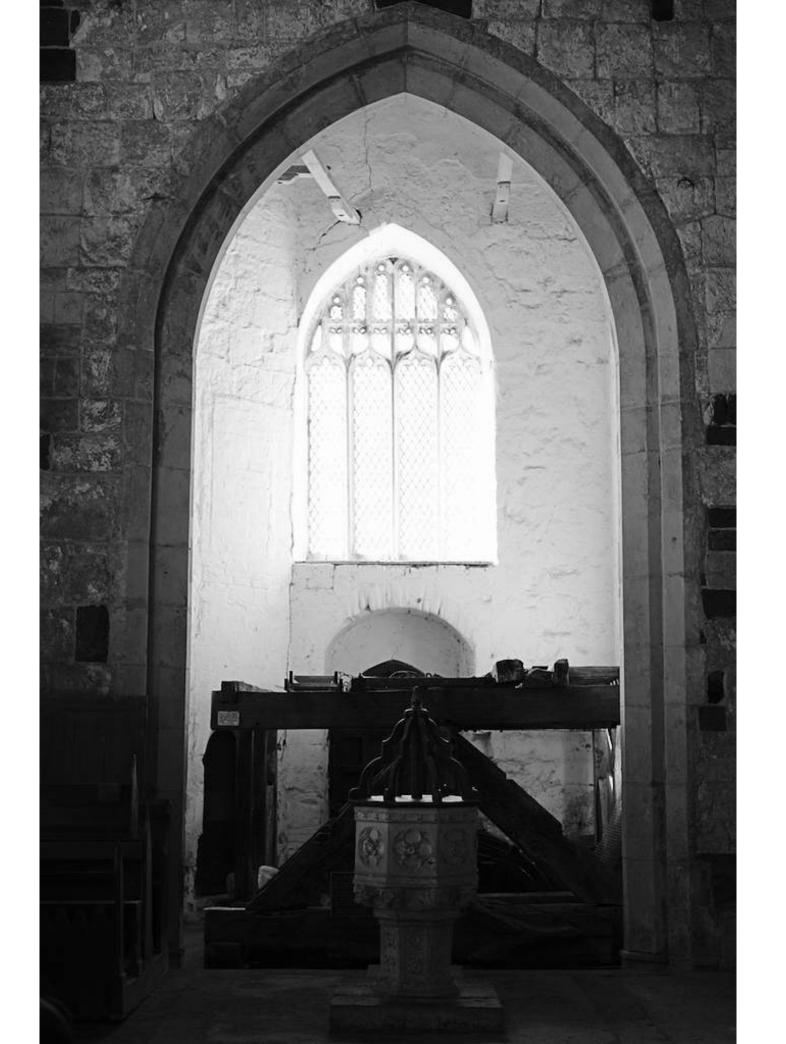

If you like my work, please visit my website: www.paul-a-j-lewis.com and/or 'follow' me on Instagram at www.instagram.com/the_krycek_facility

Twitter: www.twitter.com/Krycek_Facility

Tumblr: the soma free institute. tumblr. com

All text, images and content is (c) Paul A J Lewis, 2018 - All Rights Reserved